

Volunteer Board Director Information

What is being a good Board Director about?

Board Director's believe in helping in ways that go beyond just attending meetings. They take the role seriously and concentrate on the work they have chosen to do. Board Director's make themselves available to assist the organization in many ways such as, attending regular meetings, joining sub-committees and representing the organization at events and meetings. They take pride in their organization and speak of it in positive terms. They believe in the values and goals of that organization.

Board Director's are also open to new ideas and will share ideas with their fellow Board Director's.

Board Director's avoid conflicts. They will share any negative feedback they experience with their fellow Board Director's and Executive Director's, who can act to mitigate any negative impact to the organization.
